THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS
PREFACE

The present volume incorporates a series of lectures undertaken at the invitation of the Baird Lectureship Trustees, and delivered in the Martin Hall, New College, Edinburgh, in February 1950. I desire cordially to thank the Trustees for the honour conferred on me by the invitation and for their consent to my request under stress of other duties to defer the delivery of the lectures from the autumn of 1949 to the following spring. I wish also to acknowledge the kindness of the Principal and Senate of New College in making the Martin Hall available at the time.

The reasons which have led me to undertake a reconsideration of the purpose of the Epistle are stated in some detail in the opening chapter of the book. As a New Testament teacher I have for long been dissatisfied with the direction which critical thought, principally associated for us in this country and the English-speaking world with the names of two distinguished scholars, Professor James Moffatt and Professor E. F. Scott, has taken with regard to Hebrews during the last half-century. Whereas the older criticism understood the Epistle to reflect a phase or crisis in the evolution of Jewish Christianity in the apostolic period, the modern theory has unhitched the Epistle from these moorings and floated it out into the mid-stream of the general life of the first-century Church, so taking it out of a supposed backwater to give it a place in the main current of Christian history. On this interpretation the religious situation of the community addressed in Hebrews had nothing specifically to do with any attraction exercised by Judaism but was determined by some form of secular drift to irreligion or to paganism.

I cannot conceal the conviction that this right-about-face in critical opinion has involved a turning of the back on some of the most salient features of the Epistle, and has therefore brought about a clouding of the issues. The new theory starts not from the central substance of Hebrews but, as it seems to me, from peripheral features and from a number of a priori and not sufficiently examined assumptions regarding both Judaism and Christianity in the apostolic age. I cannot therefore think that it makes real contact with history. Indeed neither the older nor the more recent approach to the problem of Hebrews has sufficiently integrated the Epistle into the historical development of the world-mission of Christianity or brought the situation behind the letter into clear and adequate focus.

In this opinion I have become confirmed by considerations based on a fresh study of the Stephen-records in the book of the Acts of the Apostles. I am convinced that a straight line runs from the teaching and apologia of the proto-martyr to the Epistle to the Hebrews, and I believe it is to be regarded as a central line in the development of the Christian world-mission. In the present book, therefore, I have sought an approach to Hebrews which will (1) integrate the Epistle afresh into the history of the world-mission from its inception in Stephen, (2) re-evaluate the potentialities of the religious situation in such a centre of world-mission Christianity as Rome, (3) trace the connection between the doctrine of Hebrews and the theology of the world-mission as a whole, and (4) from careful study of the argument of the Epistle establish conclusions as to the situation and character of the community addressed and so recover for the Epistle its organic position in relation to first-century evangelism and life.

It is not necessary here to set out in detail the positions to which I have been led. They are indicated in outline in the closing section of Chapter I, in the summaries which conclude Chapters III and V, and in Chapter VI. The historical ground of the approach is set out in Chapter II, which deals with Stephen and his eschatology; here is indeed the pivot on which my whole argument turns. I have come to see that distinctions of a very important order have to be made within the field of the Early Christian eschatology, and that the stand taken by Stephen has been determinative of Christian theology to its furthest bounds. I have not, however, in the exposition of the relevant material of Hebrews which is undertaken in Chapters III-V attempted anything like a full commentary on the Epistle, but have confined myself to the points which bear on the above critical issues. There is, therefore, no wealth of side-reference to learned works on the more general aspects of the teaching. For myself the results of the particular inquiry on which I have concentrated attention have been to broaden the outlook both on the history—Hebrews is no mere academic treatise—and on the theology of the world-mission of Christianity in the New Testament age. If my construction of the facts is disallowed, I shall look to see it refuted; if it is defective, I trust it will be improved; if it should be thought right, I hope that even within its limits it may help at certain important points to put Christian doctrine more squarely on the foundation of Christian history, and to show it, as I say at the end of the book, rising phoenix-like from the embers not only of Jewish legalism but of the Jewish means of grace.

W. MANSON.

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH,
1st September 1950.

NOTE ON TRANSLATIONS

The rendering of the Epistle is from the author's own translation, and the same holds of passages cited from the Septuagint and other ancient texts, including verse renderings from Greek poets.
CONTENTS

PREFACE ........................................ v

CHAPTER I
THE PROBLEM OF THE EPISTLE AND MODERN CRITICAL THOUGHT ....................................... 1
Literary, Historical, and Theological Aspects of the Problem ............................................. 3
Purpose of the Present Work ........................................ 8
Traditional and Older Approaches to the Subject ........................................ 10
The Modern Volte-Face in Criticism ........................................ 16
Criticism of the Modern Theory ........................................ 18
Provisional Statement of Positions advanced in the Present Work ...................................... 23

CHAPTER II
STEPHEN AND THE WORLD-MISSION OF CHRISTIANITY ........................................ 25
Stephen ........................................ 27
The Eschatology of Stephen ........................................ 30
The Apologia of Stephen and the Epistle to the Hebrews ........................................ 36
The Rise of the Christian World-Mission ........................................ 37
Divisive Issues created by the World-Mission ........................................ 42
CHAPTER III

THE ADMONITORY SECTIONS OF THE EPISTLE. — THE ESCHATOLOGICAL LIFE
- The Word of Jesus and the Word of the Angels 47
- The Heavenly Calling of Christians and the Eschatological Now 48
- Various Warnings relating to the Crisis 52
- Advancing from First Principles to the Full Knowledge of the Christian Mystery 59
- The Consecrated Way 65
- A Reminiscence and an Assurance. — The Advent of Christ 71
- The Nature and Function of Faith 73
- The Cloud of Witnesses 81
- Other Exhortations 84
- Conclusions from Chapter III 86

CHAPTER IV

THE THEOLOGICAL ARGUMENT OF THE EPISTLE. —
1. THE PERSON AND OFFICE OF THE REDEEMER 88
- The Finality of the Christian Revelation 88
- The Significance of Christ. — The Wisdom Christology 90
- The Incarnation in Relation to Man, Suffering, and Sin 98
- Jesus Hero and Priest 102
CONTENTS

Priest by Predestination and Incarnate Qualification .................................................. 106
Priest after the Order of Melchizedek.—Priest of the Resurrection ..................................... 111
Psalm CX .......................................................................................................................... 117

CHAPTER V

THE THEOLOGICAL ARGUMENT OF THE EPISTLE.—

II. THE OBLATION OF THE BODY OF CHRIST ................................................................. 122
Priest in the Heavenly Sanctuary ......................................................................................... 122
The New Covenant ............................................................................................................. 127
The Old and the New Sanctuaries and their Atonement-Provisions ................................... 130
Priest through the Eternal Spirit ......................................................................................... 133
Mediator of the New Covenant ........................................................................................... 138
The Offering of the Body of Christ ..................................................................................... 143
The New Christian Approach to God .................................................................................. 147
The Christian Altar ............................................................................................................. 149
Note on the Holy Communion in the Church ..................................................................... 155
Conclusions from Chapters IV and V ................................................................................. 156

CHAPTER VI

THE PLACE OF THE EPISTLE IN EARLY CHRISTIAN HISTORY AND IN THE NEW TESTAMENT .................................................................................................................. 159
The Minority Group in the Church at Rome ................................................................. 159
Resistance unto Blood.—The Question of the Date of Hebrews ....................................... 162
The Writer of the Epistle ..................................................................................................... 167
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Character of the Church at Rome.—St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans</td>
<td>172</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Epistle to the Hebrews and the Old Testament</td>
<td>184</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Epistle to the Hebrews and the Evangelical Tradition</td>
<td>187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Epistle to the Hebrews and St. Paul</td>
<td>192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Epilogue</td>
<td>197</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>INDEX</td>
<td>199</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
The Epistle to the Hebrews is one of the books in the New Testament. The primary purpose of this Epistle is to exhort Christians to persevere in the face of persecution. Its content mostly revolves around the doctrine of the Person of Christ and his role as mediator between God and humanity. Because it is written in much better Greek than most of the New Testament there is dispute over its authorship. See also Mystery: Did Jesus Write the Epistle to the Hebrews? The Epistle to the Hebrews is one of the greatest mysteries in all of intellectual history: the authorship of this brilliant work is unknown, and was certainly not Saint Paul. It contains much Biblical Scientific Foreknowledge, such as foreshadowing the Second Law of Thermodynamics by explaining that the "universe" shall "wear out" like a "garment", i.e., entropy is always increasing. This book is the only one to state that Jesus was tempted The writer of this letter does not identify himself, but he was obviously well known to the original recipients. Though for some 1,200 years (from c. a.d. 400 to 1600) the book was commonly called "The Epistle of Paul to the Hebrews," there was no agreement in the earliest centuries regarding its authorship. Since the Reformation it has been widely recognized that Paul could not have been the writer. There is no disharmony between the teaching of Hebrews and that of Paul's letters, but the specific emphases and writing styles are markedly different. Contrary to Paul's usual