Bibliography

This bibliography is a part of DHR’s New Dominion Virginia initiative, which focuses on the post-World War II period through 1991. The majority of sources cited herein concern architectural design trends both at the national level and specifically in Virginia. The materials focus on a variety of architectural resource types as well, although houses are the most commonly represented. The bibliography is a work in progress. Additional sources will be added as they become known. When known, links to full-text materials published online are included in the bibliographic entry. Please report broken links to lena.mcdonald@dhr.virginia.gov.

Period Publications

Period publications are an excellent means to gain insight into the architectural design trends of the post-World War II era through the late twentieth century. Many have original photographs, floor plans, elevation drawings, streetscape views, and other graphic materials. A vast array of these publications is available through interlibrary loan, online and used bookstores, and reprints by publishers such as Vintage and Dover. Following is a representative selection of books, magazines, and online materials. These have been selected to offer a sense of the extensive variety of source material that is available and the range of resource types for which information may be found.

A specification often refers to a set of documented requirements to be satisfied by a material, design, product, or service. A specification is often a type of technical standard. There are different types of technical or engineering specifications (specs), and the term is used differently in different technical contexts. They often refer to particular documents, and/or particular information within them. The word specification is broadly defined as "to state explicitly or in detail" or "to be specific". A. As in many other European countries, Britain's main newspapers are losing their readers. Fewer and fewer people are buying broadsheets and tabloids at the newsagent's. In the last quarter of the twentieth century people became richer and now they can choose other forms of leisure activity. Also, there is the Internet which is a convenient and inexpensive alternative source of news. B. The Sunday papers are so called because that is the only day on which they are published. Sunday papers are usually thicker than the dailies and many of them have six or more sections. Some of them are Sist Synthesis Report for the EMN Focussed Study 2015.
